

Editor's Comment:

Sorry, but the authors continue to neglect the writing and formatting of the manuscript text. As ended formatting, I am referring to the standardization of font size, spacing, tabulation of items and sub-items in a standardized manner throughout all the article, according to the rules. There are many authors to correct something so trivial and it has been recommended so many times, that the manuscript should not even be accepted anymore if it does not return definitively in the correct way. There is no scientific journal in the world where these writing rules do not exist - in any language. Hence the surprise of having to make the same comment so many times. The role of reviewers and editor is to review the scientific content and adequacy to the scope of the journal, not the writing of the manuscripts - this is the obligation and responsibility of the supervisor of the research group and of each author who signs the manuscript.
