Compulsory REVISION comments	This is a good review about placental tuberculosis with a case report of placental tuberculosis, diagnosed on histopathological examination of placenta showing caseating epithelioid cell granulomas with langhan's giant cells and Acid Fast Bacilli on Zeihl Neilson stain. The work is relevant to the journal, however, minor revisions and refinement of the illustration are essential prior to be considered for publication. <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. A more detailed signaling pathways for innate and adaptive immune response in placental tuberculosis needs to be described. 2. In the reported case, where there any placental Immunohistochemical studies or staining of different inflammatory cells or myeloperoxidase? Please include if any 3. The figure legend in figures 1 and 2 are too short and doesn't describe the lesions found. Also the used stain and magnification used should be included with arrow pointing to the specific lesions in the figure.
